The colour of wine comes from the skin of the grapes only, as most grape flesh is colourless. So to make red wine, the grapes are crushed and the skins left in the juice until it is 'dyed' a red colour. The same technique is used for rose wines, but the skins are left in the juice for a much shorter time, so the resulting colour is much paler, in fact it is pink! You can find many, many different styles of rosé, from very light and delicate, to fruity and full-bodied.

Africa & Middle East The old world meets the New world on these continents as winemakers experiment with a variety of different grapes to create rich, fruity Merlots, Cabernets, Syrahs and Pinots. The south African Pinotage – a different grape to Pinot Noir – is unique to that country, whilst from Israel and Lebanon you can try seriously classy blends of French grape varieties.

Australasia Australia may be famous for its big, spicy shiraz, and New Zealand for its cool, crisp Pinot Noir, but both continents produce wines of many different styles, including New Zealand syrah (the same grape as shiraz), and Australian cabernet. Winemaking here is as old as the hills, and the quality of the wines testifies to this.

Europe The 'classic' winemaking countries produce a wealth of different wine styles thanks to each country's range of climate and soils. As well as the more familiar bottles, you could try a spicy crozes Hémitage (made from the syrah grape) from France, a savoury Barolo from Italy (perfect with a steak), a rich Ribera del Duero (made from Tempranillo, (the same grape that's in Rioja) from Spain, or even a delicious Douro made from grape varieties found only in Portugal.

Red Wines

The Americas California produces some very fine Cabernet Sauvignon and Zinfandel, and other styles too. Chile has been the king of South America for consistency and value, but increasingly Argentina is challenging its position with wines of quality and finesse. Try a Carménère (a grape brought from France to Chile more than 150 years ago), or a Malbec from Patagonia, the very southernmost part of South America.

Dessert Wines

Dessert wines are very, very concentrated in flavour and sweetness, so you only need a small glass to enjoy them. They range from being very light and delicately sweet, like the Botrytised Semillon or The Welder, to being complex and unctuous, like the Icewines or the Gold Label Tokaji.
