From Time Out Dubai Eating Out 2011

This restaurant means business when it comes to steak. It has become a Dubai institution – it even has a celebrity following, the names of whom can be found scrawled on plates adorning the walls of the Madinat venue (our favourite is Jordan's barely legible 'signature'). Despite the place being busy most nights, service is always attentive and swift; on our last visit, it took longer for us to peruse the book-like menu than it did for our order to arrive. Within 15 minutes, two glistening New Zealand sirloin steaks arrived at our table. Aesthetically speaking, there wasn't much to them, but there's little room for fussy presentation in a steakhouse and, without a second thought, we happily tucked into the juicy giants that sat before us. The meat was perfectly seasoned and cooked, slipping down our gullets with oyster-like ease. A consistent restaurant is a good one, and being guaranteed a satisfying steak every visit is no bad thing.
